Evidence A: How This American Teenager Turned Her Childhood Hobby into a Global Business

When Bella Weems was 14 years old, she wanted a car. Bella tried to raise the money by looking after young children but after a few months she had only raised $350.

She was disappointed at the low payment for this service. As a result, her parents said that if she thought of a new idea, they would give her an additional $350 to help start a business.

Bella looked online for ideas and chose jewellery, something she found fun and interesting, particularly customisable lockets. These are separate chains, lockets and charms that can be put together to create pieces of jewellery that tell individual stories. She called the business Origami Owl and began selling her Living Lockets®.

Bella's own Living Locket® holds a cameo charm in honour of her grandmother, along with a sunflower charm and a cupcake charm just because she loves these two things.

To get the business started, Bella held jewellery parties at her house. Friends and family could come and buy the components to create their own Living Lockets®. She received positive feedback from people at her parties and they advertised her business by wearing the lockets.

20

Bella and her mother set up a small shop in November 2011. They sold an estimated $60 000 of jewellery a month during the Christmas season. More importantly, her customers sent them around the country as gifts. Soon Bella was receiving calls from people in different states across America wanting to buy more.

25

Origami Owl now offers various products, including the 'Core Collection' that focuses on the current trends in jewellery. Rather than just telling the story of the wearer, lockets can now include what the buyer needs to match their fashions. The business buys Swarovski crystals, which bring sparkle and prestige to the custom-designed stainless steel lockets. Origami Owl's collection also includes patented designs, such as the heart locket.

Evidence B: Enterprise for All

Following its early successes in selling jewellery from the small shop and jewellery parties organised by Bella, Origami Owl expanded by recruiting 'Independent Designers'. These are people who love the products and host their own parties to sell jewellery, in exchange for free Origami Owl items, discounts and 30–50% commission. Origami Owl has more than 60,000 independent designers throughout the U.S and Canada.

5

Origami Owl's main market segment is 12–17-year-old girls. There is a special programme if they wish to start their own business and become 'Owlettes'. For $149, Origami Owl sends them a starter package that has samples of jewellery to show prospective buyers at the parties.

Bella is planning to expand into Mexico or Europe and to create a wider range of jewellery collections.

Evidence C: Force for Good

In the United States, five children die every day due to abuse and neglect. Childhelp is a charity set up to reduce the number of children suffering every day.

Origami Owl has adopted and used Childhelp's Twitter hashtag #FiveTooMany to show its support for this cause.

5

Customers can support Childhelp by purchasing one of three special charms from Origami Owl. 100% of the proceeds from the sale of these charms go directly to Childhelp.
